GERMAN CINEMA 1895 to the present day

What has never been done before, now becomes reality: the historic blower hall of the Völklinger Hütte World Heritage Site is the congenial setting for a synopsis of German film from 1895 to the present day. Large screens and monitors invite you to wander through a unique film landscape.

The multimedia exhibition by the Völklinger Hütte World Heritage Site and Deutsche Kinemathek Berlin spans from the legendary "Wintergarten" program by the Skladanowsky brothers on 1st November 1895 in Berlin through early silent film and sound film to current formats and film productions from 2023. This highly elaborate show both scientifically and in terms of exhibition staging, contains over nine hours of film material and more than 350 exhibits from Deutsche Kinemathek's collection, and it not only demonstrates Germany's eminent contribution to global film history, but at the same time, it shows how German film, which achieved world renown with Expressionism and the cinema of the Weimar Republic, reflects Germany's culture and history. A panorama of the 20th and 21st centuries in Germany unfolds in ten exhibition chapters, including a filmstudio and cinema, that are as eventful as they are moving.
